HISTORIC VALLEY FORGE.

It Has Changed Very Little Since the Memorable Winter of 1777-8.

The Pennsylvania legislature having appropriated $25,000 to buy the 250 acres of land including old Valley Forge and Fort Washington, the state's commissioners have done their work, and there is a great revival of interest in the place. The reports are surprising. The region at the end of 115 years is even less im- ning of history. proved, or rather more heavily wooded. than when Washington's army left it in the spring of 1778, and a vast amount of work will be required to fit it for a state encampment ground, as intended.

The land is high, well watered and yet well drained, and when it is properly cleared no finer place for a national guard encampment can be found. Though it is on the border of Chester and Montgomery counties and but 20 miles or so from Philadelphia, it is very secluded, the scenery is romantic, and a visit to the camp will be a delightful excursion. There are the gorge and narrow valley where the original forge was lo-cated, in 1777 the only forge in the state north of Philadelphia, and thence the slope is gentle to the Schuylkill. But the fort and most of the old camp are covered by a dense and tangled growth of brush and vines, and one may go within a few rods of some well preserved landmark and not see it.

Unfortunately all the big trees of any value were cut down a few years ago by local proprietors, and an oak stump i feet across the top is all that remains of that magnificent forest monarch which stood in the southeast corner of Fori Washington. The remains of the fort, however, are remarkably well preserved The people living near by are not at all proud of their predecessors, for it is a painful fact that the farmers thereabout in 1777-8 were nearly all Tories. They would not seil to the army, and when troops were sent out for forage the own ers often burned it.

A clump of trees in a plowed field marks the site of Fort Huntington, and the main redoubt there is still almost as it was when the revolution closed. The rifle pits also are well preserved, and to this extent the growth of vines and brush has been a great advantage, binding the soil and preventing the washing. In the middle of a plowed field owned by a Mr. Pierson and sacredly preserved is the grave of one of Washington's men, the headstone bearing only this inscription, "J. W., 1778." The G. A. R. decorates his grave every year, but who "J. W. was no man knows. The old Potts house-headquarters of Washington-is still in good repair, and when the old camp is cleared no doubt many an old relic of the sad winter of 1777-8 will be brought to light.

HERE IS ZIMRI DWIGGINS.

The Gentleman Whose Financial Methods Are as Peculiar as His Name.

Zimri Dwiggins is a thorough Hoosier, but his family was originally French. The legend runs that the name was De Wiggins (and the Wiggins certainly does not look Frenchy), and that the uncultured pioneers cut it down to Dwiggins. Possibly the original was D'Ouiggennes or something of the sort. In the olden times there were many institutions in the west known as "coonbox banks" and a little later many so called free banks, whose bills were popularly known from the pictures on them as "red squirrel," "steel plow," "blue pup,"

"sick Indian" and "smooth monkey. All these went to everlasting smash in the bank panic of 1854, and a sound system of state banks succeeded. The Bank of the State of Indiana, of which Hugh McCulloch was president from 1856 to 1863, was eminently sound and success ful, and its methods prepared the people to receive the national bank system glad-

ZIMBI DWIGGINS. The Dwigginsonian method was too much like the old way. He first figured as a small banker in Attica, Ind., and formed a partnership with George W. Wiggs and J. M. Starbuck under the musical title of Wiggs, Dwiggins & Star-

They organized the United National bank of Chicago, capital $50,000, which in some way not yet explained they swelled into the Columbia National bank, with an alleged capital of $1,000,000. The examiner hints that it was really founded on a deficit of $300,000, all the actual cash having been lost in mining speculations in New Mexico. Nevertheless they went on organizing small banks all over the country and induced many good men to put in money and lend their names. All these little banks have collapsed, and startling revelations are promised.
